INTRODUCTION
The reason for this work

I was born and raised in the city of Lisbon. The city has had a strong influence on my photographic work. Since I began photographing, in 1976, my main interest was to discover and to show little-known aspects of Lisbon. My first serious work was a photographic survey of Lisbon's taverns, in 1980. Later, I made another survey about the night life of the city. Both were published in books (1). In 1986 I created an exhibition of photographs of players of Laranjinha, a game popular in these taverns. In the same year I also made a survey about old buildings of a certain area of the city that have since been demolished. Presently, I am interested in photographing the dance balls that are organized by popular clubs on Saturdays and Sundays.

During my photographic surveys I have often wondered about which photographers in the past had made work about the city similar to mine. And I wondered what kind of approaches they took to photograph the city. In 1983 my father gave me a collection of old magazines from the years 1906-1913. The "Ilustração Portuguesa" was published in Lisbon from 1906 to 1924. It was an illustrated magazine and the photographs are often more important than the words. "Ilustração Portuguesa" shows much about the city of Lisbon in that period, and I learned for the first time about photographers that had photographed Lisbon in the past. Then I asked photography collectors and archives collections and I was informed that a reasonable amount of photographic work has been made about Lisbon in the past, but unfortunately a large part of it is little known and seldom available.

I decided to make my Master of Fine Art thesis about "The photographers that photographed the city of Lisbon in the period from 1886 to 1914". This way I could combine my studies in photographic conservation and historical photography with my interest in the documentation of the city of Lisbon. The time I have chosen was a period of great social change in Portuguese society. It was during this period that the bourgeoisie replaced the nobility as the dominant class in the Portuguese society. 1886 is a symbolic date to begin my research. It is the year of the first great international exhibition of photographs in Portugal. The "Exposição Internacional de Fotografia do Porto" took place in the Crystal Palace in the City of Porto and had the participation of many photographers such as Carlos Relvas and Rocchini from Portugal and J. M. Brownrigg, P. H. Emerson and H. P. Robinson from England. The Republic was established in Portugal in 1910. 1914 is the first year of the First World War and the fact that Portugal took part in it, on the Allied side, changed things considerably in the country.

It was a great pleasure for me to visit the collections of photographs existing in the city (most of them unknown for me) and to go through old newspapers and magazines, finding out about my country's past. Also, the research I made in Lisbon archives and collections gave me an idea of the present condition of these collections and the existing conservation problems. This will be useful for me in my profession as soon as I get back to Lisbon. During my research I also developed many professional contacts that will probably be useful in my career in Portugal.

I want to say something about the limitations of this work. The history of photography in Portugal is a wide field that was never seriously studied. A few articles were published in newspapers and magazines about particular photographers, but an extensive work is yet to came. And the most important collection of photographs in Portugal, the "Arquivo Nacional de Fotografia", created in 1979, is not organized and is closed to the public. I could not make any research in this collection and I believe that they hold a great number of photographs of Lisbon.

Another limitation I had was time. This study requires years of continuous dedication and the six months I could spend doing my research are only enough to show just the visible tip of the iceberg.

FACTS ABOUT PORTUGAL AT THE TURN OF THE CENTURY
Portugal occupies an area of 34,254 square miles. It is smaller than New York State, which has an area of 47,576 square miles.

By the turn of the century Portugal had colonies in Africa, Asia, and Oceania. Angola and Mozambique were the largest and most important Portuguese colonies. They are huge territories, with an area of about 800,000 square miles. Alaska has an area of about 586,000 square miles. However these territories were occupied by the Portuguese only on the shore line. The interiors were jungle, occasionally crossed by explorers.

The Portuguese population in 1900 was 5,400,000.

Lisbon has been the capital of Portugal since 1260, shortly after it was conquered from the Moors by Afonso I, the first King of Portugal. Lisbon is located on the mouth of the River Tagus, very close to the Atlantic Ocean. It was the departure point of Portuguese navigators on their way to Africa, India and Brazil in the XIV and XV centuries. Lisbon is an important seaport were Portuguese vessels carried the oriental goods, like gold, spices and jewelry back to Europe. This brought an immense prosperity to the city, which reached it's highest point in the XVI Century. Lisbon was by this time an important cultural center of Europe. A large number of monuments testify to all the magnificence of the Poruguese capital in the late XVII century.
On November 1, 1755 a huge earthquake destroyed the city almost completely. The population decreased from 350,000 to 200,000 after the earthquake. About 60,000 people were killed and a large number of people left the city. It wasn't until 1900 that the city's population recovered. The earthquake and the subsequent fire destroyed all the central area of Lisbon. The new city was rebuilt in the same spot, in a quite modern fashion, with squares, straight avenues and wide open spaces.

In 1822 Brazil gained its independence from Portugal. Brazil had been a Portuguese colony since the 1500s and its independence caused a great economic crisis for Portugal. Virtually all of the Portuguese economy in the XVIII century was based on the income from Brazil, and it took Portugal about 30 years to recover from this loss.

The Liberal Revolution took place in 1820. The Liberal party's victory resulted in a limitation of the King's powers and the election of a parliament through direct suffrage. In 1832 a civil war occurred between Liberals and Absolutists. The Liberal's leader was King Peter IV and the Absolutist's leader was his brother King Miguel I. The war between the two brothers lasted two years, ending with the victory of the Liberals. Miguel was expelled from Portugal. King Pedro ruled just for a few months and died in September 1834.
In September, 1834, Pedro IV's daughter, Maria II became Queen of Portugal. During her reign the fight went on between the rising new class of bourgeoisie and the old ruling class, made up of the land owners, the nobility and the church. The September Revolution occurred in September 1836. The first law limiting slavery dates from this period.

In 1846 a Popular Revolution started in the north of Portugal and it lead to another civil war. This revolution had the participation of many women and it was named after the heroine "Maria da Fonte". The Spanish army and the British navy, on the Tagus River, helped defeat this revolution.

After 1850, Portugal entered in to a period of relative social stability and economic growth. The country had recovered economically from the loss of Brazil and the political system was stabilized around a moderate constitution that limited the King's powers and created the conditions for the development of industry and agriculture. The engine of this progress was the evolving class, the bourgeoisie, which was composed of businessmen, employees, military men, and lawyers. In this period the government reorganized public administration, organized the postal system, created telegraph and submarine cables, and began railroad construction.
The first industrial and agricultural exhibitions took place in Portugal at this time. It was a period of cultural development. A series of new theatres were created in Lisbon, the Geography Society was opened and the African expeditions gained a new dimension. In this period republican and socialist ideologies gained adherents in the Portuguese population, particularly in the two most important cities, Lisbon and Porto. A strong influence from the French and Spanish revolutions in the 1870's was also felt in Portugal. Spain had been proclaimed a Federal Republic by the Cortes in 1873. In the next year, Afonso XII was proclaimed King of Spain.

In 1889 Carlos I became the new King of Portugal. By this time Portugal had pretensions over the territory between Angola and Mozambique in Africa. Great Britain and Germany were coveting Portuguese African colonies, and in 1890 they made a treaty to share these territories. In 1889 England sent an ultimatum to Portugal to renounce their interest in these territories, or a war would be declared. The Portuguese government acceded. This generated a great dissatisfaction in Portugal, and a first attempt to create a Republican coup occurred one year later in the city of Porto.

The British have had for a long time a very strong influence in the Portuguese territories. The friendship between these two countries is well known internationally, but for the Portuguese it functioned more as a protection against Spanish invasion. After the British ultimatum to Portugal, the anti-British feelings and republican feelings increased. Republicans took advantage of these feelings, including in their program a section about the creation of a new African Empire patterned after those of Belgium and Holland.

In 1903 Edward VII, King of England visited Portugal. In 1906, following a rise in political instability, parliament was closed and a dictatorship was installed, with the support of the King. The press was censored and many newspapers were prohibited. This dictatorial government of João Franco ruled for two years.

In February 1, 1908 King Carlos I and his oldest son, D. Luis Filipe, were murdered by a high school teacher, named Buiça. Buiça was a member of the Republican Party, but he was acting on his own. Manuel II, second son of Carlos I, became the new King of Portugal.

Although the new King was only 18 years old, he tried to create a climate of agreement and social peace. However the Republican party was already very strong and well organised. In 1908 the Republicans won the municipal elections in Lisbon. Two years later, in October 4, 1910, a revolution started and on the next day, the Republic was founded. The Royal family left the country in a fisherman's boat from a beach at the north of Lisbon to the Royal yatch, and sail to Gibraltar.
The new Republic had many difficulties in a conservative and monarchic Europe. Only France and Switzerland were exceptions to the monarchic regimen of the other European countries. The provisional governement's first laws were to separate the church and state, suppress nobility's titles, establish the right to strike for the workers (and to lock out for patronage), and a law allowing divorce. From 1910 to the First World War there was a visible progress in the economy and relative social stability.

In 1864, 72% of the total population was engaged in agriculture. But it is important to emphasize the growth of the bourgeoisie as a class during this time. In 1820 it included about 8% of the total population. The majority were public workers, teachers, lawyers, physicians. Only 10% of the bourgeoisie were business men. In 1867 the bourgeoisie had doubled its percentage in the total of the population, the number of business men were increasing, and kept growing until the 1900's. However, in 1911 the rural population was still the majority, amounting to 57% of the total Portuguese population.
WHY DID THEY PHOTOGRAPH LISBON?
During my research on the photographic collections of Lisbon I found very few images of the city dating from earlier than the 1870's. The amount of work existing from the 1880's and 1890's is considerably larger. In the first fourteen years of the twentieth century, photographs were frequently used in the press and many images of Lisbon were made and published. The sales of postcards increased during the first years of the 20th century, until World War I. I intend to analyse the reasons for the increased interest in the urban photographs of this period and discuss the work I found during the research.

THE DOCUMENTATION OF THE CITY

Many photographs of Lisbon have been taken since the early days of photography in Portugal. The earliest image made in Portugal by means of a photographic process is known today through a wood engraving reproduction. This reproduction was made after a Daguerreotype and was published in a periodical. It is dated from 1840 and it represents the Ajuda Palace, one of the Royal Family residences. During the wet collodion period, many images were made of the streets, buildings and monuments of Lisbon. The earliest general views of Lisbon I could find were taken prior to 1873. They are two panoramas composed of several albumen prints mounted together, made by the photographer Francisco Rocchini (Slide #1). I dated this image prior to 1873.
because it shows the top of the Augusta Street Arch under construction, and the statue was not placed on top of the Arch. The Arch was unveiled in 1873. Both these panoramas were widely reproduced. I found them often in books such as "Guia Illustrado de Lisboa", from 1891, and in periodicals of this period and other periods. The other early panorama I found is a view of Aquedocto das Aguas Livres, by Fillon. It is composed of three mounted albumen prints. Another photographer, A. S. Fonseca also made some views of Lisbon and published an album before 1871.

THE BUSINESS OF PHOTOGRAPHY

In the period 1886-1914, photography in Lisbon was an important business. The city had a population of about 350,000 people. During this period 181 studios were in business and advertised at least once in the "Anuário Comercial". Most of these studios were active for more than five years and some of them were in business throughout the entire period.

Portraiture was the most important sector of commercial photography. It was the only kind of photography with enough public support to allow professional photographers to earn a living. The most well-known and important studios in this period were "Photographia Allemã" (in business from 1878 to 1904), the Augusto Bobone studio (in business from 1895 to 1910), the Octávio Bobone studio, son of Augusto Bobone, (in business after his father's death, in 1910), the João Francisco Camacho studio (in business from 1888 to 1910), the Fernandes studio (in business from 1898 to 1914), the Fillon studio (in business in until 1892), "Photographie Francaise" (started business in 1910), the Arnaldo Fonseca studio (in business from 1903 to 1914), the Julio Novais studio (in business from 1899 to 1914 or later), the José Maria da Silva studio (in business from 1895 to 1914), the Frederico Redondo studio (in business from 1904 to 1914 or later) and the Carlos Vasques (in business from 1904 to 1914 or later). All these studios had portraiture as their prime activity.

THE SOCIAL AND TECHNICAL CHANGES

In 1871 dry plates were introduced and slowly took the place of the wet collodion process. Dry plates were much more convenient to use because they did not require any darkroom work on the spot where photographs were taken. Photographers bought the pre-sensitized plates from suppliers. In order to make the exposure, they just had to carry the camera and the plates. The plates were developed days or weeks later, after they got back Great changes occurred in the Portuguese press during the Liberal Revolution in 1822 and in the period of the turn of the Century. Early newspapers were made to influence political opinion. They were—low circulation papers and were given for free to the public. These papers were produced and paid for by the political groups and many of them were published during the periods of political and social instability. In the late 1860s the first informative newspapers were published in Portugal, covering a range of subjects, and having a wider circulation. They were paid for in part by the readers and in part by the advertising. In the first years of the twentieth century, several illustrated magazines started publication in Lisbon, marking a new period in the Portuguese press.

The development of the press in Portugal at this time was the product of the advance towards democracy and the free circulation of ideas and opinions in Portuguese society. Considering the size of the population of Portugal, the number and the quality of the periodicals in this period is remarkable.
Photography entered into the press very slowly. It was first used by the engravers to make wood engravings. The first illustrated periodical published in Portugal was "Ramalhete", published in 1837. "Arquivo Pitoresco" from 1856 and "Dois Mundos" from 1877 were other early periodicals published in Portugal. The first illustrated newspaper I found started in 1877. "Ocidente" was published every ten days until 1912, and it contained four to eight images per issue. The images published were wood engravings made after a drawing or after photographs. Halftones were introduced for the first time in 1889. The first halftone published in "Ocidente" represents the Batalha Monastery and is the reproduction of a photograph by Camacho.

"Ocidente" was a newspaper about politics and society, and the images published were portraits of political leaders and reportage about political ceremonies. It is interesting to note that the images were not directly related to the surrounding text. The text was usually an extensive political commentary. The images were captioned and showed ceremonies, visitors and meetings. Following the other illustrated periodicals, in the first years of the 20th century "Ocidente" published more and more images per issue. Photographers were not considered part of the newspaper staff. On January 10, 1902, the special issue celebrating the 25th anniversary of "Ocidente" had an extensive reportage about the staff of the newspaper. Photographers were not referred to at all, but wood engravers had a special mention. The magazine ceased publication in 1912.

"Illustração Portuguesa" was an illustrated newspaper published in the last years of the 19th century. It published wood engravings and covered a range of subjects wider than "Ocidente" did. This magazine had no relationship with another magazine with the same name published in 1903.

At the turn of the century three other illustrated magazines began to be published in Portugal. They were "Brazil-Portugal", "Seroes" and "Ilustração Portuguesa".

"Brazil-Portugal" started in 1899 and was published twice a month for the next twelve years. It was fairly illustrated, primarily covering political events, but it also reported on society, sports, culture, parties, theatre, and international news. The activities of the King of Portugal were the favourite subjects for the reporters. Every issue related both public and private events occurring in the King's previous two weeks. The printing process of the halftones delayed the publication for at least two weeks and the news was two weeks old. The magazine could not compete with the newspapers in broadcasting the news, but could present a more elaborate display with a more careful commentary. However when important events such as the regicide occurred, the news was released in the next issue (including photographs and commentary), in order to capitalize on public's interest.

"Brasil-Portugal" had a section of sports and another section about theatre published in all the issues. Most of the photographs published in "Brazil-Portugal" were by Benoliel or by Lima. The photographs were not always signed and I could not identify many of the published reportages. Periods existed where not a single photograph was signed in the magazine. In other periods all the photographs have an indication of the author. I can not explain this fact. The photographs published in "Brasil-Portugal" as a whole are a very good resource of information about the city of Lisbon in the period.

The magazine "Seroes" was published monthly from 1900 to 1911. This magazine is an entertainment publication about culture, curiosities, science and life. "Seroes" published interesting reportage about Lisbon such as the public gardens, the city by night, the markets, the flea markets and transport. It published photographs from photoreporters like Benoliel and also from other photographers that were not reporters, such as José Artur Bárcia and Paulo Guedes.
The magazine "Illustração Portuguesa" was published by the newspaper "O Século", in two series. The first series of "Illustração Portuguesa" started in 1903 and lasted for two years.

"Illustração Portuguesa" series II started in 1906 and was published until 1924. This was a weekly magazine covering all subjects of interest for the middle class through the use of photographs. The range of subjects covered is quite wide, including politics, the workers' strikes, reportage about restaurants, stores, events, accidents, sports, art events, openings and unveiling ceremonies, Royal Family activities, and the arrival of vessels to the Tagus River. The magazine extensively covered the Revolutionary period in the 1910's, publishing a complete account of the fall of the Monarchy and the social movements of that period. The magazine's layout was quite artistic. It had drawings around the photographs, and cut outs were used to surround the drawings. This was an imaginative way of displaying images. "Illustração Portuguesa" was ahead of all the other magazines published in this period in the creative use of images. The photographs were in fact more important than the text, containing a large part of the information, with the text supporting and explaining the photographs. Thirty to sixty images were published every week, and their quality was remarkable. Benoliel was the major photographer of the magazine. His contribution was so important that I believe that the success of this periodical was due to his photographs.

I spent a few weeks looking at the photograph albums, then studied the photographs published in the periodicals. This was like seeing a play after looking at the theatre scenery for a long time. The albums show the scenery and the magazines show the people and the events.

The profession of photoreporter began at this time. For the first time there were individuals who could make a living through sales of photographs to the press. The demand for news images was large and Joshua Benoliel and A. Lima made their careers photographing events in the streets. They operated as free lances and frequently sold the same stories to more than one magazine. The magazines did not have exclusive rights to the reportage, but I did not find the same photograph published in two different magazines. Other photoreporters were Alexandre Cunha, Serra Ribeiro and J. Garcês. Photographers such as Fernandes and Arnaldo Fonseca combined studio activity with photojournalism in the 1910s. On October 13, an exhibition of press photographs was held in Lisbon, in the Imprensa Nacional building (National Press building).
JOSHUA BENOLIEL

Among the photojournalists, Joshua Benoliel should receive special mention. Benoliel was an above average photographer. He published more images in the periodicals of this period, than all the other photographers put together, and he made these images with remarkable quality. Benoliel was noteworthy in his choice of subjects, in his ability to be present in the right place at the right moment, in choosing the best point of view to photograph and in his sensitivity to understand and capture the human phenomenon.

I found many images by Benoliel in the collection of Camara Municipal de Lisboa. After a certain time of contact with the collection I was able distinguish the images by Benoliel from images by the other photographers, just by looking at them. His images usually have something that make them unique. He had an ability to create interesting images from boring events. Among hundreds of images showing the funeral of King Carlos I, only one is visually interesting. It is an image by Benoliel of the funeral cortage passing by an industrial plant (Slide #7). In the anniversary of death of the Portuguese writer Alexandre Herculano, Benoliel photographed the crowd and the arch behind (Slide #8), creating in 1908 an image, that photojournalists would be proud of taking twenty years later. Benoliel was also able to transmit his sense of humor to the images, as we can see in Slide #9. He was a man willing to work hard to get an image. In order to take the photograph of a duel involving Afonso Costa, Benoliel climbed on the roof of his car and shot over the garden wall. An image of the duel was published in the magazine Illustracao Portuguesa and an image showing Benoliel on top of the car was published in the magazine Brazil-Portugal. Benoliel had the ability to choose the best point of view. In order to photograph the street-car drivers strike, Benoliel went to a balcony, showing all the crowd on the roof of the tramway, and the people moving around and running behind the tramcar. The riots in Lisbon were also photographed from a high vantage-point.

Benoliel was also attentive to the daily life of the city. He photographed street people to describe a way of life. Images showing the sewing women on their way to work or the nurses taking care of children int the public gardens (Slide #10), were not remarkable in the 1910's. Today these images are interesting because they show the way people used to live. Benoliel understood this potential value of photography, and he shot hundreds of similar images, going beyond the narrow limits of journalistic events. Benoliel made a good collection of photographs from cafes, restaurants, cars, department stores, used bookstores, peddlers, public fountains, women washing laundry in the rivers, the removal of pianos (Slide #11) and households, water carriers, people consulting lotto numbers lists, and other events and activities.

Benoliel was well respected and he had good contacts in the ruling classes. He managed to be present in high level political meetings, such as the visit of President Loubet from France to King Carlos I, the Algeciras Conference, and the visit of King Manuel II to England. Benoliel was admitted to the Royal hunts, met the Emperor William II of Germany, King Edward VII of England, and was a personal friend of Afonso XIII King of Spain, who once stopped his carriage to greet him. Benoliel photographed the Revolution of October 5, 1910, the Portuguese troops in World War I, and in all these situations he was able to take excellent photographs. In some aspects, Benoliel's work antecipates Erich Salmon's photographs.
SELECTED PHOTOGRAPHERS
José Artur Bárcia was an artist and photographer who lived in Lisbon. His photographs were published in the magazines "Ilustração Portuguesa", in 1906 and in "Serões", in 1908 and 1909. Bárcia published at least two series of postcards, "Portuguese Landscapes" and "Old Lisbon" of great ethnographic and historic value. Bárcia was a close friend of the Portuguese writer Julio de Castilho, and he compiled an index of the 8 volumes of "Lisboa Antiga", [Old Lisbon], an ethnographic and historical essay about Lisbon. I presume Barcia was interested in studying and photographing the city of Lisbon and had a good knowledge of it. He made a series of portraits of writers and poets "at home and in the office", in a style quite advanced for the period in which they were made (Slide #12).

I would guess that Bárcia was not a professional photographer, but may have had occasional assignments for newspapers. He was an advanced amateur, interested in the artistic side of photography and in experimentation. He published night photographs, including street people at night, in the magazine "Serões", in 1908 (Slides #13, #14 and #15).

Slide #16 is also by Bárcia.
Joshua Benoliel was born on January 13, 1873. He died in Lisbon, on February 3, 1932. Information about his birthplace is contradictory. At his death, newspapers asserted that Benoliel was born in Lisbon, but the photographer Horácio Novaes, who was Benoliel's assistant in the late 1920's, and the Portuguese photographic historian José Luís Madeira assert that Benoliel was born on Gibraltar.

Benoliel was a British Jew, who spent most of his life in Lisbon, working as a free-lance photographer for the newspaper "O Século" and the magazines "Ilustração Portuguesa", "Brazil-Portugal", "Ocidente" and "Serões". Benoliel was the creator of photojournalism in Portugal, shooting hundreds of thousands of images during thirty years of intense photographic activity. His first reportage was published in the magazine "O Tiro Civil" in 1898. In 1906 "Ilustração Portuguesa" started publication, and Benoliel began his long colaboration with the magazine. He worked for the "Ilustração Portuguesa" until 1918, then he quit to start a food business. Six years later Benoliel returned to "O Século", as head of the photographic departement, but by this time "Ilustração Portuguesa" had ceased publishing and Benoliel's photographic activity was greatly reduced.
But from 1903 to 1918 Benoliel was present in every major political event in Portugal, from diplomatic receptions and processions to strikes and revolutions. He travelled to London and Paris with King Carlos I. He met Emperor William II of Germany, King Eduard VII of England and he was a personnel friend of Afonso XIII, King of Spain. Benoliel was in Spain during the fall of the monarchy. He photographed the Algeciras Conference, the Republican Revolution in Portugal in 1910 and the Portuguese participation in the first World War. His photographs were published in magazines such as "ABC" (Madrid) and "Illustration" (Paris). He also photographed the daily life of the city.

He married Simy Benoliel and had two sons, Judah and David, and a daughter, Ester. He lived in Rua Ivens, no. 6, 4th, in Lisbon. His son Judah also became a photojournalist.

Benoliel kept all his glass plates at home, piled in his corridor. After his death, the glass plates were sold to institutions and interested people and the collection was dispersed. Many of these plates were lost. A great number of them are in the collection of Camara Municipal de Lisboa.

Slides #7, #8, #9, #10, #11, #17, #18, #19 and #20 are by Benoliel.
AUGUSTO BOBONE
(1852-1910)

Augusto Bobone was born in 1852 and died in 1910. He studied at the Academia de Belas Artes in Lisbon. A well-known artist, he took over Fillon's studio in 1889, after Fillon died. His studio was at Rua Serpa Pinto, n. 79, in Lisbon and it was in business from 1889 to 1910. Bobone was essentially a studio photographer and most of his works are portraits, but he also made some architectural photographs. He was also known as a photographer of art objects, such as paintings, sculptures and jewelery.

Bobone held the title "Photographer of the Royal Families of Portugal and Spain". Bobone was awarded "Grand Prix" in exhibitions of Paris and Rio de Janeiro and he was awarded gold medals in Italy, United States, Belgium and Egypt.

After his death on 1910, his son Octavio continued the Bobone studio, and maintained the prestige of his father's work.

Slide #21 is by Bobone.
João Francisco Camacho was born in 1833 on Madeira Island (Portugal). He died in Lisbon on November 7, 1898. Camacho lived in Madeira until the 1860's. By that time he had traveled in America and Europe, where he learned photography. He then opened a photographic studio in Lisbon. The studio was located at Rua Nova do Almada 116-2. It was in business at least since 1888, but probably started earlier. After Camacho's death the studio was kept in business until 1905. In 1901 they advertised a telephone (number 288). In 1906 the Camacho's studio was taken over by Arnaldo da Fonseca, but it retained the same name and address until 1910.

Camacho published photographs in the magazine "Ocidente" in 1886, 1888, 1890, 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1897, and his work was posthumously published in "Seroês" in 1901.

Camacho also photographed of the Royal Family of Portugal in late 1880's, early 1890's.

Camacho was a prominent member of the "Sociedade de Geografia", the most active and distinctive scientific society in Lisbon during the period.
Fernandes started working as Augusto Bobone's assistant. Then he founded his own studio in Lisbon, on April 9, 1898, at Rua do Loureto no 43-1. Fernandes was in business at least from 1901 to 1914. He advertised images of landscapes, monuments, and interiors. He also sold images made by the famous photographer Carlos Relvas.

Fernandes frequently cooperated with Joshua Benoliel. He also made photographs for postcards. These are primarily of theatre scenes and portraits of artists. They were published by Paulo Guedes e Saraiva. Fernandes and Benoliel together photographed the Republican Revolution of October 5, 1910 and the social agitation of the following years. Fernandes also photographed the visit of King Edward VII of England to Lisbon in April, 1903.

Fernandes published photographs in "Ilustração Portuguesa" from 1908 to 1913, in "Brazil-Portugal" in 1905, and in "Ocidente" in the years of 1905, 1906, 1908, 1912. Most of these photographs are theatre scenes and portraits of artists. The bibliography listed below is not complete. There are many more essays about theatre from Fernandes in these magazines during these years.
ARNALDO DA FONSECA

Arnaldo da Fonseca was born on May 4, 1868. He graduated from the Naval Academy, but he did not follow a career in the navy. He started working as a photographer and became one of the most prestigious artists of the period.

Fonseca founded the Instituto Photographico, which operated at Rua Ivens no 28-1, from 1891 to 1896 (at least). Fonseca was the director of the studio "Officinas Photográficas", located in Praça dos Restauradores no 38, from 1903 to 1914 (at least). It was advertised as the only studio in the city with an elevator. The Camacho studio was taken over by the Officinas Photográficas in 1906. This studio was located at Rua Nova do Almada 116.

Fonseca was a Republican, and after the Republican revolution in 1910, he embarked on a diplomatic career, and was posted to Manaus in Brazil, Vigo in Spain, and Verin.

In 1899 he published a Practical Guide to Photography (Guia práctico de fotografia), a Guide to Color Photography (A fotografia a cores pelo método directo, o método indirecto e pelo método misto, sua relação e actual solução prática) and in 1905 another Guide for the Photographer (Guia do Fotógrafo).
Though he was a Republican, he made portraits of Kings Carlos I and Manuel II and of the visit that the Queen of England made to Portugal in 1905.

His photographs were published in the magazine "Brazil-Portugal" in 1900, 1901, 1902, 1905, 1908 and in the magazine "Ilustração Portuguesa" in 1908 and 1910. Fonseca also published photoessays and photographs in "Seres" in 1908 and 1909 and in "Ocidente" in 1903 and 1904.
I do not know much about Anselmo Franco. I don't even know if Franco was a professional photographer. There is a reference about Franco in "Ilustração Portuguesa" in 1913, stating that he was one of the exhibitors in the photographic show of Imprensa Nacional. This was a show about photography in the press.

The collection of Camara Municipal de Lisboa holds a group of photographs by Franco that are good examples of city documentation. His images show events and activities, and are dated from 1908 to 1918.
Paulo Emilio Guedes was born at Mondim da Beira, in Portugal, on March 23, 1886. Early in his life he moved to Lisbon and started working as a clerk. At the same time he was studying at "Ateneu Comercial de Lisboa". In the 1900's he began a publishing company named "Papelaria e tipografia Paulo Guedes e Saraiva". This company became well known in Lisbon as a postcard publisher. By 1912 they had published about 1900 postcards. They also published the Album "Quadros da Historia de Portugal" (Images of the history of Portugal) and several school books.

Guedes intensely photographed the city of Lisbon through the 1910's and the 1920's. He photographed buildings, public gardens, political events, sports, Royal Family life. His photographic activity extends up to 1940. I found a large amount of work by Guedes in the collection of Camara Municipal de Lisboa. However I could find only one photoreportage by Guedes in the magazine "Serões" in 1909. Most of his work was probably intended for postcard production. All his work shows an intention to document the city, and is of very high quality.

Slides #5, #6 and #23 are by Guedes.
With the name Lima I found four different first names that may or may not belong to the same person:

1. Lima
2. A. Lima
3. A. C. Lima
4. Alberto Lima

Lima published an article about the Music Bands in the magazine "Seroes" in 1908, and presumably he was alive and active then.

A. Lima published in the magazines "Ilustração Portuguesa" in 1912, "Ocidente" in 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911 and 1912 (32 reportages total) and published in the magazine "Brazil-Portugal" in 1904 and 1905 (19 reportages). He photographed ceremonies such as openings, dedications, lunches, receptions, meetings, monuments, the king's activities, the army, bull fights, sports, theatre and schools. Most of his photographs do not go farther than documenting the event he was photographing, such as a group of politicians leaving a meeting or a the king visiting an institution. Lima didn't put much imagination in his images, and many of them are repetitive and boring. He has a few good images, but he never went beyond the requirements of the magazine.
Between them, A. C. Lima and Benoliel took about ninety percent of the photographs published in the magazine "Brazil-Portugal". A. C. Lima had the same style as A. Lima and I think they are the same man. He published 179 reportages in Brazil-Portugal from 1908 until 1914, covering all subjects of that time. He published images about sports, boat races, and the Republican Revolution. All the information I have from this photographer is from "Brazil-Portugal".

Alberto Lima published in "Ocidente" in 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1908, 1911 and 1912 photographs of social events, funerals, sports and theatre.

Lima, A. Lima, A. C. Lima and Alberto Lima were photoreporters. If they were the same man I can tell that he was a very active photoreporter, in business in the period from 1900 to 1920. I didn't find any photographs by Lima in the collections.

Slides #24 and #25 are by A. C. Lima.
ANTÓNIO NOVAES

António Novaes lived and worked in Lisbon. He worked with Joshua Benoliel. Novaes was for some time the court photographer of King Carlos I. In 1896, Novaes had a photographic studio in Lisbon at Rua do Arco da Graça no. 30. This is the only year I found a reference to his studio.

His portraits and reportage of politics and social events were published in postcards by Paulo Guedes e Rocha. His work was published in "Archivo Democrático", "Archivo Republicano" and "Rocha".

Novaes published in "Brazil-Portugal" in 1904 and 1905, in "Ilustração Portuguesa" in 1908 and in "Seroes" in 1908. His magazine work is mostly photographs of political events and portraits of the Royal Family.

Slide #22 is by Novaes.
FRANCISCO ROCCHINI
(182?-1893)

Francisco Rocchini was from Italy. He began working as a wood worker and later specialized in camera construction. Rocchini opened a photographic studio in Travessa da Agua Flor no 1-2. The studio was operating from 1888 to 1896. Rocchini died in 1893, at the age of 72, but the studio was kept in business until 1912.

Rocchini's studio published at least one catalog and price list of his photographs, dated September 16, 1894. It offered 451 photographs and panoramas. Most of these images show the city of Lisbon and surroundings, including general views, houses, streets, churches, train stations, theatres, monuments, hotels, markets, war vessels and art works. Unveiling ceremonies and photographs of monuments were also advertised.

Rocchini published photographs in the magazine "Ocidente" in 1886 and 1890. After his death his images were published in "Seroes" in 1908 and "Ocidente" in 1895, 1898, 1908 and 1910.
Rocchini was a photographer of the city. His images are mostly architectural views and cityscapes. He made also same photographic surveys of industrial plants, like the slaughter houses and the water pumping station, but these photographs emphasized architectural information rather than human aspects.

Slides #1, #26 and #27 are by Rocchini.
Carlos Vasques was a photographer with a studio at Rua D. Pedro V, in Lisbon from 1904 to 1906. In 1907 he moved to Largo da Abegoaria no. 4 in Lisbon, and remained until 1914 (and probably in the following years). Vasques published photographs in "Ilustração Portuguesa" at least in the years 1908, 1910 and 1912. He published photographs in "Ocidente" in 1908. The great majority of his images are related to the theatre, from stage scenes to portraits of actors and actresses.

The most remarkable work by Vasques that I could find was a series of photographic albums, named "Fotografias de Lisboa" (Lisbon Photographs). Each one contains 35 8"x10" toned gelatin silver prints. Most of these images are from the late 1910's and 1920's. They display the interiors and exteriors of palaces, churches, health centers, clubs, street scenes and monuments.

Slides #2, #3 and #4 are by Vasques.
THE METHODS AND SOURCES OF RESEARCH
Photographic collections and periodicals were the two main sources of information for this survey. I have listed the most important photographic collections in Lisbon, including some collections that are not open to the public. I also list postcard collections. I have also listed illustrated magazines published in this period. In the second part of this text, I describe the criteria I used to select the photographs and the methods I have developed to date the images of Lisbon.

COLLECTIONS

ARQUIVO FOTOGRAFICO DA CAMARA MUNICIPAL DE LISBOA

Largo da Rosa, 1100 Lisboa

Hours: Monday-Friday, 9:00am-5:00pm

Contact: Dr. Armando Silva

This is the archive of Lisbon City Hall. The collection is very interesting, holding 80,000 images of the city, from 1870 to 1974, on glass plates and film, from which modern gelatin silver prints were made. There are no original prints in this collection. About 75% of prints have an author indication, but in some prints authorship is attributed to collectors or dealers. About 20,000 of these images belong to the period I am studying, from 1886 to 1914. There is a card file organized by streets and city places. The collection is not computerized and there is no file organized by photographers. Copy prints are available for a fee. The photographers represented are Bárzia, Benoliel, Anselmo Franco, Alexandre Cunha, Horácio Novaes, Mário Novais, Salgado, Paulo Guedes, Passaporte, Eduardo Portugal, Martins Pozal, Rocchini, A. Salgado, Dinis Salgado, Jaime Santos, Manuel Tavares and others. There are also a great number of photographs from the Seixas collection. I went through all of the images from the period I am studying.

ARQUIVO FOTOGRAFICO DO JORNAL "O SÉCULO"

The newspaper "O Século" started in 1880s and was published until the late 1970's. The same company that published "O Século" published books and magazines, such as "Ilustração Portuguesa" and others. The photographic collection includes about 80,000 glass negatives and a great number of film negatives. I could not consult this collection, as it has been closed to the public since 1986. It is being moved to FOTOTECA (a government department, see below) and will be open to the public at some time in the future.

ARQUIVO NACIONAL DE FOTOGRAFIA

Calcada do Mirante à Ajuda 10, 1400 Lisboa

Hours: By appointment

Contact: Dra. Victoria Mesquita

The National Archives of Photography holds about two and a half million images, from Daguerreotypes to contemporary color slides. A great part of this collection are glass-plate black and white negatives. The collection is not organized and access to images is difficult. I could consult only a photographic album from Rocchini. The great majority of negatives do not have a accompanying copy print.

BIBLIOTECA DO MUSEU DA MARINHA

The library of the Naval Museum has a collection of 30,000 photographs, put together by the collector Seixas. This collection includes images of World War I and the shore line of Lisbon. I could find no indication about the authorship of the photographs.

BIBLIOTECA NACIONAL
Campo Grande, 1700 Lisboa

This is the National Archives of Portugal. The Iconography Department holds a good postcard collection. Most postcards are not signed and were useless for my research. The Biblioteca Nacional has the largest periodicals collection in the country, holding virtually all illustrated magazines ever published in Portugal. Some of them are available for consultation on microfilm only.
FOTOTECA-SECRETARIA DE ESTADO DA COMUNICAÇÃO SOCIAL
Palácio Foz, Praça dos Restauradores, 1100 Lisboa
Phone 362821

Holds 39,000 images on glass plates, films and negatives. The earliest are 1880's images of the celebration of the 300th anniversary of Luis de Camões's death. There are forty eight images from the 1910 Revolution. The rest are post 1939 images. I could find no author indication.

HEMEROTECA
Rua de S. Pedro de Alcantra, 1200 Lisboa
Hours: Monday-Friday 9:00am to 7:00pm

Holds a great collection of magazines and newspapers published in Portugal. Among them all issues of "Ilustração Portuguesa", "Brasil-Portugal", "Ocidente", "O Tiro Civil", "Tiro e Sport", "Seroes" and others.

MUSEU DA CIDADE
Campo Grande, 1700 Lisboa
Hours: Tuesday-Sunday, 10:00am-5:00pm
Contact: Dra. Raquel Florentino

This museum owns a collection of photographic albums, some of them were compiled by the the historien Vieira da Silva and others assembled by photographers. The following is a list of albums and authors from the Museu da Cidade which I was allowed to consult.

"Vistas de Lisboa do Século XX", Bobone. [Two albums "XX century views of Lisbon", with a stamp from A. Bobone on the lower left mount. Each album contains forty one, 10"X 12" printing-out paper prints, displaying interior and exterior views of the following institutions:

Album I - Literature school, Sciences Academy, Natural History Museum, Commercial and Industrial Institute of Lisbon.

Album II - Army School, Casa Pia, Maria Pia asylum, Jerónimos Cathedral and monastery, the National Library].

"Lisboa, Fotografias, Desenhos e Projectos". [This is a collection of thirteen albums put together by the historian Vieira da Silva which contain drawings, postcards, photographs and newspaper clippings about the city of Lisbon. I could consult the following albums:

Album V (1903-I 7), with photographs by A. S. Fonseca.

Album VI (1904-I 7), with photographs by Rocchini.

Album VII (1905-I 7), unidentified photographs

Album XIII (1911-I 7), with photographs by Rocchini.
"Hospital de Doenças Infecto Contagiosas", Feyo e Castro. ["Contagious disease Hospital". Twenty six printing-out paper photographs, displaying interior and exterior views of the hospital].

"Fotografias de Lisboa", Carlos Vasques. ["Lisbon Photographs". This is a collection of albums numbered I, II and IV. Album number III is not in this collection. Each album contains forty-four toned, gelatin silver prints, mounted on boards with the blindstamp of Carlos Vasques and the address Largo da Abegoaria 4. On the back of each mount is a stamp with the name Vasques and a different address; Rua Raphael Bordalo Pinheiro. Album number I has photographs of the Benfica and Jesus Clinics, interiors of palaces, churches and several other buildings in Lisbon. Album number II has photographs of monuments, streets and the main squares of the city. Album number IV has interiors of Maxim's Club and Ulrich Palace. Some of these images are from the late 1920's and early 1930's].

"Album de Lisbonne". ["The Lisbon Album". (Accession number 1819-I 7). The album displays 5"x 7", mounted albumen prints of Lisbon. Many of them are by A. S. Fonseca. Others have no author indication. The images display city panoramas, monuments and churches].
"Aqueducto das Aguas Livres", Fillon. (Accession number 798-I 7). [Three 11"x 14" albumen prints, mounted as a panorama, showing the most remarkable part of this water canal in Lisbon].

"Panoramas de Lisboa", Rocchini. ["Lisbon Panoramas", album containing two panoramas of Lisbon. The first panorama is a view from the castle on the west side of the city and is composed of seven 8"x 10", mounted albumen prints. The second panorama is a view from S. Pedro de Alcantra, on the East side of the city, and is composed of six 8"x 10" mounted albumen prints].

"Canal do Alviella", Rocchini. ["Alviella Canal". The album displays the opening ceremony, the facilities and equipment of the water pumping center of the Alviella Canal. It is composed of ten 10"x 12" mounted albumen prints. Each mount has a subtitle. The museum holds two copies].

"Asilo de Mendicidade de Lisboa", Rocchini. ["Poverty Asylum of Lisbon". The album is composed of 10"x 12" mounted albumen prints showing interiors and exteriors of this asylum. There are portraits of patients as well. The mounts have printed subtitles].
"Torneio no Hippódromo de Belêm", Clemente dos Santos and Camacho. ["Tournament at Belêm hippodrome, in the evening of April 24, 1892". The album is composed of 8"x 10" albumen prints, displaying scenes of this recreation of a medieval tournament and its spectators. "Cliché by Clemente dos Santos", "Photographs by Camacho" and "Published by M. Gomes, book seller of the King and Royal family" are written on the mounts].

"Festejos do tricentenário de Camões em 1880", Henrique Nunes. (Accession number 1821-I 7). ["Festivities of the Three Hundredth Anniversary of Luis de Camões's Death". The album is composed of 5"x 7" mounted albumen prints, displaying the decorated floats used in the festivities].

"Lisboa Artística e Industrial, 1908", J. Barrera. ["Views of Lisbon artistic and industrial"].
"Brazil-Portugal" was published twice a month, from 1900 to 1913. The magazine had an average of 20 pages per issue and in each issue had twenty to thirty photographs. The dimensions of each issue were roughly 12"x 16". The main subject of the reportages were the political events and political commentary. Great attention was given to the king's activities. Some issues published cultural and social reportages. Every issue of Brazil-Portugal contained a section about theatre and another about sports. I consulted all issues published.

The series II of "Ilustração Portuguesa" was published from 1906 to 1924. It was a weekly magazine, increasingly illustrated from 1906 onwards. The magazine had an average of 40 to 50 pages per issue and in each issue 40, 60, or even more photographs were published. In weeks of great social or political activity, or in weeks that important sport events occurred, the magazine published issues containing more than one hundred photographs. The dimensions of each issue were 10"x12". Large stories were published containing photographs. Illustração Portuguesa anticipated the German magazines of the 1920's and 1930's in the publication of photo essays. The photographs were the most important carriers of information and the text was often just a support for the images. The magazine covered all subjects of interest in that period.

* OCIDENTE *

"Ocidente" was published every ten days, from January 1, 1878 until December 10, 1912. It was a periodical about politics, seldom illustrated. Each issue had an average of 8 pages and its format was roughly 16"x 20". No more than 10 photographs were published per issue, and sometimes only four or five photographs were published. No photo stories or groups of photographs appeared and often there was no connection between text and images. The great majority of the images published were portraits. I consulted all issues from 1886 until 1912.
"Seroes" was published every month from 1901 to 1911. It was an entertainment magazine, with articles about general subjects, from city life to fishing for whales. The dimensions of each issue were about 8"x 10", the number of pages per issue was 50, and the number of photographs published per issue varied between 15 and 30. Groups of photographs were used to illustrate the same subject, but no photo stories were published. I consulted all the issues of Seroes.

METHODOLOGY

I used the following criteria to select the photographs: I defined two levels of quality. The first level included all the images that may be within the scope of this project. The second level includes only the best quality images, which would be selected to present the slide show.
In order to be included in the FIRST LEVEL an image should accomplish all the following requirements:

1. Photographs should have a photographer identification, or a studio indication, or some kind of authorship reference.

2. Photographs should display a subject related to the city or outskirts of Lisbon. I included the nearby towns of Sintra, Cascais, Mafra, Montijo, Barreiro and Almada. I considered the following subjects related to the city of Lisbon: city views, streets, squares, buildings, stores, restaurants, political life, social and military events, daily events, portraits not made in studio, interiors of palaces and residences, exhibitions, congresses, sports. I excluded studio portraits, advertising and fashion photographs, and art objects from this group.

3. Photographs should have been made in the period that I am studying; 1886-1914. If not dated, photographs should not show any clue that prove they belong to another period.

With this criteria in mind, I went through the collections and publications listed above and built a card file with entries arranged by the photographer's name. I included a description of each image or group of images and the source. Some unidentified but very interesting images were included in "anonymous" section.

In order to be included in the SECOND LEVEL an image should meet all the requirements of first level, plus it should present exceptional interest and good print quality. This "exceptional interest" is essentially a personal judgement based on aesthetic criteria, journalistic interest, the display of the evolution of the city or interesting ethnographic or technological aspects.

I found a great number of undated images in albums, collections, and sometimes in publications or periodicals. City views were often used in periodicals much later than the year they were taken. An example of this is an image published in "Ocidente" in 1908 to show the place were King Carlos I was murdered. The published image is from a photograph taken by Rocchini in the 1890's.

In order to help date the views of Lisbon, I compiled the following list of dates for the construction and unveiling of buildings and monuments. The indicated dates, if not otherwise specified, are opening or unveiling dates.

COLLECTIONS

ARQUIVO FOTOGRAFICO DA CAMARA MUNICIPAL DA LISBOA

This collection holds about one thousand photographs from Barcia, most of them are printed from original glass plates. The images display a variety of subjects about the city as well as reproductions from old gravures and art objects. The city images display the usual views and panoramas, buildings, monuments, streets. Images of charity institutions like blinds asylum are particularly interesting. There is a group of photographs about markets, and another group showing the Tagus River, including boats, fishermen, shore line views and beaches. In this collection are the photographs of Lisbon at night. There is a good amount of portraits of artists and writers, like Julio Castilho, António Ramalho, Columbano, Afonso Lopes Vieira, Malheiro Dias and Abel Botelho. All the portraits were made indoors, at the working place of these artists. The collection holds also reportage images like King Manuel II acclamation, processions and a meeting of arquitects in Lisbon.
